

While many websites or apps have their own way of saving recipes, there are none that are able to consolidate them nor are they able to integrate with ones day to day to lives by suggesting purchases or keeping track of what ingredients one may have.

Perhaps an app can exist where the user enters what ingredients in whatever amounts they may have. This app can then scour the internet searching for recipes that use only those allotted ingredients.

It could also provide suggestions for other ingredients while you're shopping that lets you diversify your recipe index.